

GPSEG New Jersey Chapter holds clean energy panel discussion

Clean energy discussion participants, from left: Roy Hibberd, Lee A. Solomon, Tony Wojciechowski, David Weiss, Laurie Weigand-Jackson, Steven Cuevas and Trish Oelrich (Candida Seasock)

Andrew Gotlieb • Reader Submitted • October 27, 2010

On the evening of Oct. 20, the Greater Philadelphia Senior Executive Group's (GPSEG) New Jersey Chapter held a dinner and panel discussion on the present and future state of the Clean Energy Industry.

The event, held at the Tavistock Country Club, provided a unique opportunity for executive networking and a stimulating and informative discussion.

Clean energy continues to fuel the plans of many cities, states, nations, investors and companies as they look for the next wave of innovation and growth. The sector is delivering new job and economic opportunities as it moves from a once-marginalized niche to an increasingly cost-competitive, mainstream industry.

The panelists agreed that the clean energy industry offers some of the largest growth opportunities on the global economic horizon.

The panel consisted of Trish Oelrich, moderator, from PEPSCO Holdings Board of Directors; the Honorable Lee A. Solomon, President of the N.J. Board of Public Utilities; David Weiss, President and COO of PEPSCO Energy Services; Laurie Wiegand-Jackson, President North America Power Partners; and Steve Cuevas, Director of Business Development at Areva.